Advisor Announcements

. from advisor Studio Stu:

Well my friends, I'm back again at one of the most wondrous art collections, and great acoustical, listening rooms; The Lehman Loeb Arts Center at Vassar College. Beginning this Thursday, I will be hosting and performing at their 'Late Night Thursday' events, and the start of a once-a-month jazz session, where students as well as musicians from the area are invited to come and experience the art, and the art of jazz improv. All musicians are encouraged to bring instruments, or voice, and be ready to create a new path through the improvisational wilderness. This workshop is designed to build confidence through performing, deliberate listening, constructing short, expressive solos, and experiencing a thought process to enhance technique as well as intuition. In essence, "How To Play Well With Others".

So, come stroll and absorb this current remarkable exhibition, have a drink (coffee or water), eat some light foods, and look, listen and perform as we explore all types of music, within the jazz genre.

All Ways, sTuDlo.

. from advisor Andrea Wolper:

Hi, there. It's November (how'd that happen?) and that means my CD release celebrations are coming up very soon. I hope, hope, hope that if you're in the tri-state area you'll join us at one of them. The whole quintet will be playing, which doesn't happen as often as I'd like, so this is an especially good time to hear us.

Wed. Nov. 16 at Zinc Bar, NYC

Sun. Nov. 20 at Trumpets, Montclair, NJ

Reviews 🎵

I'm happy and relieved (I do not kid!) to say that "Parallel Lives" has been getting some extremely gratifying reviews. If you'd like to see any of that, click here.

Interviews 🎵

I've been doing some radio interviews; one was a podcast for WGLT in Normal, IL. I think the way they do their interviews is pretty interesting; you can listen to it on my new website. Look for the music player at the very bottom of any page, click the "on" button, and there you go (it's short - about 15 minutes). And feel free to tell me if you're finding the website easy to read, navigate, etc.; the content is of course mostly music-related, but there are a few other things there as well. I'll also be heard on a podcast at The Jazz Session, which I believe will be available in about 2 weeks.

Two more interviews coming up; if you're in the area you can tune in on a radio; if not you can stream on your computer; be sure to adjust for your time zone:

KUNV Las Vegas

Art/Dance Fundraising

Party

in support of Evelyne's humanitarian efforts in Laos

This is a reminder about the special evening I am hosting at my art studio on Saturday the 19th. I will offer all of my artwork at 50% off because it is so important to me to raise the funds needed for myself and my two teenagers to travel to Laos and help 600 orphans in need. On display you will see my oil paintings, mosaics, pastels, and photography. It will be a festive evening with delicious refreshments and lively music, so bring friends and wear your dancing shoes!

One Voice for Laos

is a project I started to engage local teenagers in becoming the humanitarians of tomorrow by raising funds for the Deak Kum Pa Orphanage. We are in the middle of one year of fundraising events that will culminate in a trip to Laos with 6 - 10 local teens to give 2 weeks of community service on site.

Here is a link to our blog describing our efforts:

<http://www.ideachampions.com/OneVoiceForLaos/>

And here is a link to the orphanage itself:

<http://www.deakkumpaorphanage.com/>

Party Details!

When: Saturday, November 19, 2011

Time: 6pm to 11pm

Suggested entry donation: $10

Where: Little brown door between Orpheum Theater and The Inquiring Mind Bookstore (300 Main Street), Saugerties, NY

Light refreshments will be served, and if you would like to bring something to share, please do!

An Eight week tour, a Hometown Holiday Bash, a new website, and a new CD-

From the boonies of Pennsylvania to some fancy digs in San Francisco, I'm in the middle of one of the most wonderful tours I've ever experienced. I'm playing solo at homes, clubs and art centers. The generosity of folks across the Country has been stunning. There are so many people in America who love music, who are hopeful for the direction of our Country and who want to help. They've inspired me over and over.

It seems that everybody's talkin' about the Occupy Movement. Talkin' about fracking. Talkin' about chemtrails. And they're not just talkin'. They're working in food pantries. They've been lobbying and, in some cases, re-calling their representatives. And, inventing ways to survive and thrive these tough times.

I've been posting photos and some brief essays about the trip on Facebook and on the new website (www.marcblack.com). I hope you'll get a chance to read some of them.

If you'd like to schedule a house concert just about anywhere on this volatile planet of ours, just lemme know. Coming into the Holiday season, I'm brushing up on my 'Chestnuts Roasting'. You know, although it's been a tough year, this is the time to enjoy each other and give thanks for all the many blessings we've enjoyed.

And as soon as I get back, I'll be tuning up with my Band for our show the Saturday of Thanksgiving weekend, November 26 at the Bearsville Theater. The evening will feature some special holiday treats...Happy Traum, Warren Bernhard. It'll be a co-bill with my dear friend and wonderful singer, Amy Fradon!

We've had so many wonderful shows at the Theater including the recent benefit for Hurricane Irene. Check out this jam. We were joined by Garth Hudson, John Sebastian, Happy Traum and Marco Benevento. Nancy Cantandella shot these great videos:

[Move Up To the Country
Trouble
While I'm Standing](#)

I'll write again soon about the new CD. It's a very informal collection with songs about Pete Seeger, pure water, the troubled mind of America and how love might heal it. I got help from Happy Traum, John Sebastian, Warren, Mike Esposito and Amy Fradon.

Marc

PS. By the way, if you're an early riser, Amy and I will be on WDST (100.1 FM in Woodstock) with Greg Gattine at 8:30 am on Wednesday, November 23.

• from advisor Sharon Rich:

Last week on Grey's Anatomy, a sanitation worker comes in to the ER with half his right hand smashed into too many pieces to save. Callie, the orthopedic specialist, takes one look and says, "That hand's gotta come off!" But as the patient is being prepped for surgery, Callie discovers that he is a skilled and inspired woodprint artist and that his art is his joy in life. She considers herself something of an artist, too. She sees clearly that saving his hand is a way of saving his life -- and preserving something positive in the world. She changes her planned course of action and decides to rebuild the hand.

Watching this, it struck me that I know someone in a similar situation: Daryl is leading a division in a large medical technology products business. The conservative parent company has cut his budgets and staff and is declining his requests for resources needed to grow the business. Daryl's response has been to do his best to put out his biggest fires and put his focus on polishing his résumé.

Do you see the similarity? Daryl thinks the hand can't be saved. He's given up.

What's different between the two situations is that Daryl doesn't have a reason to push through this first assessment. At least, not yet.

What if he did? What if Daryl saw that the purpose his organization could serve in the world is bigger than him? Bigger than his fears of failure or rocking the corporate boat or being disappointed or not being up to the task? What if he believed as deeply as it is possible to believe anything that he could make a real difference in the lives of many people by overcoming his fears and going for the change he knows his company needs? What if he got that giving up on the company would equal giving up on himself?

Do you think that might get him to let go of the idea that his situation is hopeless? Do you think that could engage him in some creative problem solving and possibly some strategic risk taking with the parent org to get something different and better happening?

What we're talking about here is engagement. Full engagement...you might also call it ownership...inspired by a sense of bigger purpose. When companies have this they perform miracles. This isn't just in the movies. It happens in business all the time. Only not as often as it doesn't happen!

So where in your work (or life) are you less than fully engaged? What goals have you given up on that were once energizing and exciting, that held true potential for you or your business? What are you ready to amputate that isn't truly done for?

What would happen if you took another look on a deeper level and saw what was really at stake? What if you took full ownership? What would it be like to take full responsibility for the consequences and costs of giving up -- and allowed yourself to reconnect with the potential benefits and gains of taking a fresh look and really putting yourself on the line?

What would happen if you fully engaged as if someone's life depended on it?

Maybe someone's life does. Maybe it's yours.

Wishing you an inspired week,

Welcome to all newcomers. We are in the process of developing networking teams for the purpose of connecting People With Opportunity to People Looking for Opportunity (PWO/PLO). Stay tuned in for future updates on getting the word out about your opportunity that you have or for one that you are looking for.

Coaching and Mentorship Tip of the Month!-

“Individuals win Trophies, but TEAMS win Championships!”, John Wooden- One of my favorite books and highly recommended as the Book of the Month “A Lifetime of Observations and Reflections- On and Off the Court” ...teaches about personal and professional growth through TEAMWORK “....I remember hearing another one of my mentor’s say “...anything that has achieved a value of SIGNIFICANCE and/or GREATNESS was not achieved by one person!” Okay, you might be thinking to yourself this can easily be debated on certain achievements...but when it comes down to it... ALL achievers have had great coaching along with a team of others around them to assist in the accomplishment.

Third Thursdays will kick off the Inaugural meeting on February 16th at 7PM at the Marriott Residence Inn located at 9 Gerhard Rd Plainview, NY 11803.
